How this Liquor is Made

True excellence is never accidental. Behind every bottle lies a symphony of natural elements, master engineering, and the patient passage of time.

Small Batch Kentucky Bourbon

Crafted from a proprietary mash bill of 72% organic corn, 18% rye, and 10% malted barley, this bourbon undergoes a slow 72-hour fermentation to develop its complex sugar profile. Distilled twice in vintage copper pot stills, the spirit enters new, heavy-char American oak barrels at a low entry proof to maximize wood sugar extraction. The aging takes place in the center of the warehouse, where natural temperature fluctuations force the liquid deep into the stave. Over eight years, it acquires rich notes of burnt caramel, vanilla bean, and toasted marshmallow before being non-chill filtered.

Single Estate Islay Scotch

This expression is a testament to Islay's terroir. The barley grown on the distillery's own coastal grain is floor-malted and smoked for 48 hours over hand-cut peat fires, infusing it with deep oak and medicinal smoke. Following a long fermentation in wooden washbacks, the spirit is distilled in two stages that refine the heavier oils. Maturation occurs in first-fill ex-bourbon casks stored in sea-level warehouses, where the Atlantic air permeates the wood. The result is a startlingly clear liquid with prominent lemon zest, sea salt, and lingering campfire notes.

Limited Edition Oaxacan Mezcal

Hand-harvested Espadín agave hearts, aged 10 years, are roasted in conical underground pits for five days using local white oak. This process imparts the signature earthiness and depth characteristic of artisanal production. The cooked agave is crushed by a horse-drawn stone mill and fermented naturally in open air using only wild airborne yeasts. Double distillation takes place in small 300-liter copper stills, meticulously cutting 'heads' and 'tails' to reveal the purest heart. This unaged Joven expression captures the vibrant botanical notes and rich agave sweetness in its purest form.

Japanese Mizunara Oak Whisky

A master blend of malt whiskies from Japanese distilleries, finished for 18 months in rare Mizunara casks. Mizunara, or 'water oak', is notorious for its porosity and requires at least 200 years of growth before it can be used for cooperage. The spirit benefits from the high vanillin content and the unique sandalwood-like incense aromas these casks provide. Before bottling, the base whiskies spend a decade in a combination of Oloroso Sherry and American White Oak. The result is a multi-layered palate of dried fruit, cinnamon, and a distinctively long, oriental incense finish that is highly sought after by collectors worldwide.

ORIGIN: Yamanashi, Japan | STRENGTH: 43.0% VOL | MATURATION: 10y + 18m

CURATOR'S NOTE

Sustainability in the Still

In our quest for the world's finest spirits, we've observed a profound shift toward environmental stewardship. The producers featured this month have implemented closed-loop water systems and solar-powered stills, ensuring that the terroir we celebrate today remains vibrant for generations. Quality is no longer measured solely by the palate, but by the impact left on the land.
